THE ART OF LIVING IN STYLE
CONVERTED SPACES AND OLDER PLACES
LEND STYLE TO STUDENT LIVING

Before you go to the nearest Huge Apartment Megaplex to find your living space for the next semester, let it be known that there are alternatives. With a little patience and time to search around Tucson's historic downtown and university areas, you may be able to find an older residence that makes up in style what it lacks in modern conveniences, a place that had been many, many things before it became a place for you to call home.

Lauren Benz and her four roommates live in Studio Apartments, in the mostly commercial downtown area. Their loft-style apartment, which has been a graphic design studio and a recording studio, has a few problems other apartments don't. There is no heating system, no central cooling system, no residential garbage service, no mail service and no parking. But the benefits of living in the apartment are numerous. The open architecture has allowed the roommates to host parties with up to 600 guests, with space left over to allow bands to perform.

Henry Electric Apartments is another converted space. A former electric store opened in 1935, the building was divided into four separate apartments two years ago. The contractors that renovated the building left the original, polished, concrete floors, while installing industrial-looking steel wall to the main room and recycled pool tiles to the bathroom. They also left the original Henry Electric sign out front, which can invite some confused visitors to the property. Residents have come out to find elderly men browsing through their belongings, looking for electrical supplies.

Rincon Apartments, located on North Sixth Avenue and East University Boulevard, are older apartments that boast the kind of early 20th century architecture one won't find in brand new places. 'It's the very first apartment building built in Tucson. It was built in 1908', said the owner and manager Margaret Sokser. 'The historic building has seventeen units in it' she said, noting that over the years, there has been a fair mix of student and non-student residents. Each apartment has wooden floors, high ceilings and a fireplace.

Another apartment building in the university area, the Castle Apartments, on the corner of North Euclid Avenue and East Adam Street, was a hospital, tuberculosis sanitarium, nursing home, convent and vacation lodge before becoming an apartment building. The building, which was originally built in 1906, has thirty-two apartments and is mostly occupied by upperclassmen and graduate students, according to owner Kathy Busch. Castle resident Becky Blacher said living in a small complex owned by one person instead of a company made it possible for her to have an art show there, 'Kathy was really excited' she said about talking to her landlord in preparation for the show. 'She's so cool. What other landlord would let you put holes in cement walls?' Blacher said.

A Studio Apartments

B Henry Electric Apartments

C Rincon Apartments

D Castle Apartments

GREASE

Greasy spoons very rarely appear in guidebooks, but they are an essential part of life in the UK, especially for people living in the bigger cities. These small restaurants are so common and everyday – like baked beans or phone boxes – that they often go unnoticed, but if they were removed, the country would be on its knees. In London, the capital city of the greasy spoon, there are hundreds of them, fuelling the population with bacon, egg and sausage.

Greasy spoons cafés are so called because any cutlery that comes into contact with the food on offer is immediately coated with a sticky, greasy layer of lard. More calories can be found in a cup of tea in a good greasy spoon than in a whole meal at a normal restaurant.

Greasy spoons are generally found slightly away from the main streets of most towns, they usually have large (grease coated) glass windows, a plastic sign with the name of the café – usually containing the name of the owner e.g. Mario's, Bob's place, Rita's café – and a huge menu offering a wide variety of delights. Inside they are generally clean and functional. You'll see old wooden seats, tables covered with cracked linoleum and plain walls. Each table has on it a bottle of brown sauce, tomato ketchup and vinegar, and pots of salt and pepper. In a typical greasy spoon, you will find people from all walks of life. Poets, drop-outs, hurrying businessmen, students lazing around with huge mugs of tea. Some read novels, some stare into space, and others catch up on the day's news. At weekends there will always be large groups of friends, recovering from a night on the town.

The meals here are dangerously unhealthy, and absolutely delicious. All kinds of fried food can be bought for incredibly low prices. The centrepiece is usually the traditional English breakfast. Although it's called a breakfast, you have to be really brave to eat it first thing in the morning, because it is huge. At least two pieces of bacon, two sizzling sausages, two fried eggs (sunny side up), fried mushrooms, baked beans and bread soaked in hot oil and fried. The English breakfast is full of meat and fat. If you want something less filling, there's still a lot to choose from; particular specialities are bacon or fried egg sandwiches (or, of course, bacon and egg sandwiches). There is also often a range of vegetarian sausages and burgers.

Greasy spoons have some devoted followers. Tapping 'Greasy Spoon' into an internet search engine will bring up hundreds of entries. With pictures, reviews, menus and stories, it's the next best thing to going to a greasy spoon café yourself. But of course, nothing can beat going to the real thing – especially on an empty stomach.
